

Getting into schools

This section gives you more information about approaching schools for experience.

Getting voluntary experience in a school is a good way to decide if you want to teach in England. This experience will give you more knowledge of the education system, and help you when you apply for training or a paid job.

The 'Getting Started' section gives information on the education system, if you aren't sure what level you want to teach.

The links below will give you more information to help you find a school for voluntary experience, and then apply:

How to find voluntary experience in a school

Volunteering is a good way to understand the English education system more, gain confidence in teaching again, and help you apply for training and jobs.

How to write a CV

Paid and volunteering jobs all want to see your past experience. The way to present your past experience and qualifications is through a CV

How to write a cover letter

It is normal to send a letter of introduction with your CV if you want to volunteer in a school. This details who you are, and why you want to volunteer at that particular school.